A Note on Dating

Dating the Coldingham charters can be as much of an art as a science. Although documents begin to be self-dated from about the middle of the thirteenth century (especially records of what happened in the prior’s court) it is rare to find such information for the twelfth century and first thirty years of the thirteenth. Dating therefore has to rely first (and often last) on the known spells in office of eg bishops, abbots, priors and other clerics. The standard reference books, shown in the list of printed sources, have been used for these. Even this is not foolproof. The early thirteenth-century priors of Coldingham are anything but precisely dated and some of the acta of Bertram prior of Durham could be placed anywhere within his known dates of 1189/90 - 1212/13. After c. 1200, the acta of the bishops of St Andrews are much more helpful.

For laymen, the position is often more obscure, except for kings and earls. Even justiciars and sheriffs are sometimes poorly recorded. With lesser figures things get trickier. After c. 1250, it is possible to show floruits of many of the major tenants of Coldingham. Before then, a list of 1235 of the tenants gives some help for that decade. Beyond that, it is possible to work out rough and ready family trees for many of the occupiers of lands and hence to produce rough and ready lines of succession and floruits. We can also be sure that a certain Gregory was the steward of Coldingham for about the same period as Bertram was prior of Durham, and that a frequent witness, William of Mordington, was dead by the end of 1249. But for many other local men and women we can do no more than fit them into a broad framework in the most likely place.

Consequently, when proposed dates rely on a justification ‘from witnesses’ or ‘grantor’s floruit’ it is hoped that they are more or less right (or at least not misleadingly wrong) and helpful rather than the reverse. In the interests of brevity the detailed justification of such dates has been left out. But if more detail is required, it can be given.
Please note that while references are given to Elsa Hamilton’s calendar of the acts of the earls of Dunbar (CED), the dates for nos. 111-3, 116, 118, 121-3, 125, 129, 131, 135-6, 139-40 presented here differ slightly from those given by Hamilton.
